Report to the Presbyterian General Assembly on Their Organization. WASHINGTON, May 20. - Among the inter-Assembly during its session to day was that of the special committee on Young People's societies, consisting of Revs. F. C. Monfort and Robert J. Service, and Eiger John H. Holliday, appointed in accordance with the overture from the Presbytery of Zaneaville, asking for a model constitution for young people's societies in the Presbyterian Church.

as the for a molet constitution of the people's societies in the Presbyterian Church, which shall secure uniformity of organization in harmony with the church polity.

The committee said it did not believe that uniformity of organization in harmony with the church polity was to be attained by the adoution of one constitution by all local young people's societies. Such societies, like Pablish schools, are a part of the church machinery, and their cenduct should be left to the church.

which all our Sunday schools must conform.
The school is under the care of the session, and may be adapted in constitution and operation to the needs of the field. So it should be with the young people a society.
